The battery and supercapacitors are directly connected to the DC bus with the same voltage. The battery state of charge defines the voltage. The supercapacitor is underutilized due to the restrained voltage limit. The high power density of supercapacitors is compromised as the capability to easily charge and discharge is hindered.

Thus, the NG-HCD270 graphitic sample can be considered a promising ecofriendly and cost-effective electrode material for high-performance supercapacitors, which can benefit the substantial development of electrical energy storage industry and, hence, electrical power production from renewable energy sources at competitive costs.
